

Cadet Houghton,

This summer I went to a recruit training in Fort Indian Town Gap. When I first got there they had a sea bag inspection and a medical inspection then they gave us buzz cuts. Then after that we were led to our company barracks I was in delta company. Then in our barracks we were issued uniforms then made our racks and after that we went to dinner which was Chile. Then the next morning we woke up at 4:30 to do some PT which mostly involved push-ups. Then during the day time we learned about basic military knowledge like firefighting and seamanship and that basically was our day for 2 weeks until came graduation day, where the battalion marched out as one they were halted in the middle of a field. Then a major in the army spoke to the battalion and everyone's parents, then the executive officer gave out the awards to honor cadets and the honor company I was in the honor company and after we were dismissed Delta company had a celebration for their achievement.
